- b. At the time of the Manchukuo incident, HSIEN was a member of the Consultative Council to the Governor of Kirin. He is said to have been arrested by the Japanese, later released, and appointed chief of a district. During the following years he held several similar positions, and in 1943 or 1944 he was appointed Chief of the Administrative Department of the Pinchiang Provincial Government, a post which he was holding when the Soviets entered Harbin. He was designated Acting Governor of Pinchiang by the Red [Soviet] Army Headquarters. HSIEN attributes his non-arrest through all these regimes by saying that while he collaborated with the Japanese, he always tried to protect the interests of the Chinese population.
- c. LI Chao-lin, an old Chinese Communist worker who spoke fluent Russian and had recently arrived from the USSR, was appointed HSIEN's Deputy Governor. LI organized the Sino-Soviet Friendship Cooperation Society with himself as chairman and HSIEN as vice-chairman. Some months later LI was assassinated and HSIEN took over the leadership of the Association.
